

Free Brownfields Grant Training Workshops

The Brownfields Program was created by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to help communities deal with environmental contamination that may be presenting an obstacle to redevelopment. The program focuses on sites where either real or perceived contamination by hazardous substances or petroleum products from past site uses serves to limit reinvestment or development interest.

The Brownfields Grant Training Workshops are being held to help eligible entities including local government agencies and quasi-municipal entities (including General Improvement Districts and Redevelopment Agencies) and non-profit groups prepare the competitive grants in accordance with the grant guidelines published by the US EPA. This will include a discussion of eligibility criteria for applicants and sites, application formatting, scoring criteria, and important points of emphasis. The grant guidelines will be presented by USEPA in conjunction with State regulatory representatives.
